The Whole World is Watching:
Successful Defense of Claims in an Increasingly Visible World

W CITY CENTER
172 West Adams Street
CHICAGO

Summer 1968. Protestors and police clashed violently up and down Michigan Avenue and in Chicago's parks and film on the evening news brought the conflict into millions of homes. Meanwhile, in the midst of the confrontations, onlookers chanted "The whole world is watching."

No, Eagle is not bringing the 1968 Democratic Convention back to Chicago. We are, however, returning to Chicago for this year's annual meeting and Spring Conference. Our conference this year reflects the ever-changing issues that continue to evolve in the claims arena but also the increased pressures brought to bear on claims professionals and defense counsel alike as the claims and defense process becomes increasingly transparent and visible. Today, it seems as though what we do can be seen or discovered by everybody, both within our companies and law firms and by courts and claimants. This conference will focus on the claims professional's and defense counsel's roles and new tricks of the trades in dealing with mediations, will address the heady impact of legalized and semi-legalized marijuana on existing law and lawsuits and will explore the not-too-distant future changes we're likely to see in insurance, litigation, claims departments and law firms and the challenges those changes will pose for all of us.

"The Whole World is Watching" will also look at the availability of evidence across national borders. In an era where commercial transactions, manufacturing, electronic data and people's lives as a whole typically take place in many different countries, it is no longer unusual for claims we defend to involve evidence that is located outside the United States. This conference, with the guidance of our international members, will explore the special processes and considerations that can facilitate obtaining and utilizing that evidence and teach us how we can better use the full range of available resources to successfully resolve claims.

Eagle's Spring Conference promises to be an engaging and wild ride through interesting, important and challenging topics. Your participation (and occasional chanting and protest of the non-violent variety) are most welcome. Come be part of "The Whole World is Watching" .
